“ Well all i can say is thnx u Amy for blessing me with a great gift of raising your daughter Savannah. I'm glad that I was the mom she called on for her time of need , I'm the one that wiped her tears away when someone broke her heart, I was there for every prom she attended, I was there when she got her tooth pull or when she needed her school shots, I was there for all her school events and saw her off to school, I got all the best memories that she gave me and shared all the laughter and tears of everyday life. Took every vacation of every summer, shopping and having lunch on weekends, or catching up on a movie or just going to the park to read up on a book, I was the one that though her how to drive and took her to get her DL and I was there to get her through her first car accident, I was there for all the times you were never there, and was there for every step of her teens and I just want to thnx u for given me the best of her life, you miss it all and now you will never get to see her grow up to.become a great successful woman , I will be for ever thankful to you for given me the best of what you had....and that you will never know how great of a blessing you gave me...we share between us a daughter;you where the birth mother and i was her mom..thnx you, I pray that God have mercy in your soul....

Roxie and Terry... some many things the two of you know nothing about. Terry, you're a very SORRY person. May God forgive you. Roxie, you know nothing about any abuse towards my daughter. Why? Because there was none! So, I will hold no grudge or hate for the two of you. Amy is a beautiful daughter. I do hope, especially you Terry, have a little sympathy for her family and say MORE! I can't believe the posts I'm reading on this page. Amy wasn't a perfect mother, but who is? But for somebody to post this crap on her service trying to take away the love Amy had for her kids and make themselves center of attention is simply disgusting! Her kids were her heart and nobody can take the place of a birth mother no matter what you did for the kids.

I just can't believe people post crap and talk down on her here, but never said to her face, you will reap what you sow!

Ok this is just so disrepectful and sickening that someone would post these things on a memorial page especially since you would not and did not say it to Amy's face. Amy LOVED her children with her whole being yes she made mistakes who hasn't but to glorify yourself is not right and try to take away from Amy's love is awful may God have mercy on you as you said. You forget Amy has family and friends and karma is not pretty. I am so sorry you felt you had to be so ugly and post your dirty laundry here...a memorial page
